

Mind should be ruled by reason

Security, a good education and character training performed in love are a good foundation for later in life. Man learns through experience and knowledge.

Developing of the intellectual powers will help us to make sound decisions.

Depending on our personal orientation these may serve the good of the community or pure self-interest. Man can freely decide which proposals are designed to strengthen and encourage him materially and/or spiritually.

If man has already been brought up in his childhood to integrating Christian values such as charity, compassion and mercy, he will easily and with strong faith implement them into his conduct in later life.

Using the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, the communion of saints, and the many positive examples of spiritual role models, we will be less troubled by worldly events.

Speaking, thinking and doing good will lead us to a life of love and satisfaction.

Acknowledging the love in all beings with mind, reason and compassionate heart, man will feel an equal appreciation for all living things and develop peaceful and non-violent relationships.

Using our discernment for the realization of the value of people, we will find "the eternal good" in the hearts of all.

Willibald