

Unison of thought, word and action

Each of us knows the power of thought, the power of the word and action. Man becomes what he thinks, whether consciously or unconsciously. Thought is a product of thinking. Since childhood man is subjected to endless thoughts. Every product, every living being, everything has name, meaning, and perhaps its purpose.

Depending to intensity, personal orientation and attraction each person in the world will connect with one aspect or another.

Our life is filled with countless impressions and situations. Some are pleasant, encouraging and satisfactory, others depressing and destructive.

Why all of this?

Is man merely a pawn of creation or is there a deeper meaning in this seemingly chaotic scenario?

Based on his consciousness man has the possibility of discernment, which is the freedom of personal decision. Should he seek to clarify questions like, "Which purpose is served by my actions? What is the significance of my judgement, how I can justify my decisions?"

Everyone desires a life of happiness and satisfaction. To fulfill this need discernment is required.

A popular quote says: "Money can not buy happiness."

As man thinks of money and power, using the power of the Spirit, worldly success may be achieved!

Whether man will be happy and content this way, remains uncertain.

The Bible says:

"No one can serve two masters. Because he will always hate the one and love the other, or will obey one but despise the other. You can not serve God and money at the same time." (Luke 16:13)

A spiritually minded man will desire nothing more than happiness in union with God. This happiness sets in when thinking, speaking and doing is directed to the good, to love. The intensity of being attached to the material world will slowly vanish, as peace and contentment in the "stillness of the divine spirit" will grow.

Man, living in harmony of love, has placed God in the center of his life.

His thoughts, words and actions are all directed to God. He will become a tool and servant of the One in all.

As we are willing to serve our fellow men and God's creation through good thoughts, words and actions, we will be protected, happy and united in His big heart by Gods power and love.
